

Deep Dive into Assignments and a Baseball Game

Adam Poe, Stetson University

During week two work was in full swing. I spent the week delving deep into my assignments and learning all new areas of law. I have a wide variety of assignments on my plate ranging from research memorandums to case briefs. My favorite assignment so far has been helping to prepare a motion for summary judgment. This is a practical skill I have never attempted before, and the learning process was a fun journey. Having all my assignments looming overhead can at times feel overwhelming, but I view it as a test of my work ethic and time management skills, which I am confident. Plus, everyone in the office is extremely helpful, so I know I can reach out to anyone whenever I need to.

Although I have been working a lot, there is a true sense of balance within the office. Last week amongst the many breakfasts and lunches, I was also able to attend a Tampa Bay Rays game with many of the attorneys. It was nice to socialize with my colleagues outside of the office atmosphere. We showed up to the stadium a little before the game started and had a fun tailgate. Partner Rob Blank and I went undefeated in cornhole, which was no surprise in light of our fierce competitive spirit and exceptional cornhole skills! The Rays fell short to the Washington Nationals, but this did not ruin the experience. It was an exciting game, and everyone had a good time.

Week three is now upon us. This upcoming week I am looking forward to what is on my schedule, especially the motion practice workshop. My motivation and enthusiasm levels are the same as they were leading up to week one, which makes me believe I am in the right place here at RumbergerKirk.
