

Week Two-Gaining Exposure to New Experiences

Evan Thomas - Florida International University

This week was full of assignments. I had the chance to work with associate Erin Weinstock and help her draft a motion for summary judgment. In between drafting the motion and working on other assignments, I was able to attend (via zoom) two different mediations. It was a great experience and I learned a lot. I appreciate the firm exposing me to experiences that the law school environment falls short on.

For the summer associate program, our focus this week was on depositions. We did both a seminar and a workshop. During the workshop, we conducted a twelve-minute deposition, which was a little nerve-racking as depositions are still very new to me. The constructive criticism we received at the end of the workshop was invaluable, and I plan on implementing it when I conduct my first real deposition later on in my career.
